Jamal Khalifa, who was wanted in a United Nations (UN) and the International Criminal Court, is charged with groups like the Abu Sayyaf and the Islamic Liberation Front. ## Economy grew 5.4% in '06, missing target due to storms

By [Name]

THE PHILIPPINE ECONOMY GROW 5.4 PER cent in 2006 from the previous year, boosted by strong exports, dollar inflows from overseas Filipino workers and higher foreign investment, officials announced yesterday. Secretary of Planning Secretary Romulo M. Neri said 2006 could have ended better if it had not been for a series of typhoons that hit the country during the last quarter. Neri said typhoons shaved about 0.4 percentage points off the GDP growth.

The growth, which was measured in terms of the gross domestic product (GDP), fell short of the government's official target of at least 5.5 percent but was better than the 5 percent recorded for 2005. GDP is the value of all goods and services produced in a country in a given period. When measured in terms of the gross national product (GNP), the economy rose 0.2 percent in 2006, an improvement from the 0.5 percent posted in 2005, according to the National Statistical Commission Board. # Bin Laden's kin in RP killed

"They took everything...his company, all of his things," he said.

The Al-Jadeed satellite TV channel said the businessmen were staying at a private resort near the town of Marikina when they were killed.

"We still don't have a complete picture of the incident," Malik told Al-Jadeed by video-link from Saudi Arabia's Jeddah city port of Jeddah.

"I don't think it was politically motivated," he added in response to news questions.

Malik said the businessmen were details because his brother was a Saudi Arabia official in Manila and had an embassy on the East African island.

He said his businessmen were "to collect my brother's body."

He said Khalifa's wife and family were in Saudi Arabia.

The Philippine government sought Khalifa for allegedly financing the Abu Sayyaf, an Islamic militant group, through a charity organization in the late 1980s and early 1990s.

Janjale interview

The Philippine Daily Inquirer, in what was the last interview given by the leader of the Abu Sayyaf group before his death, on Jan. 22 quoted Khalifa's daughter as saying that his group had several friends from her country, those in the United States, identifying one of them as Jamal Khalifa.

The CNN reported on Tuesday that Khalifa's sister reported he had founded the Abu Sayyaf group in 1988 for volunteers to fight in Afghanistan's "complexity" phase.

"I have never given any money to any group or person that outside the Abu Sayyaf," CNN's Khalifa was writing in an e-mail.

E-mail address

Khalifa also made the detail in a letter that was published in the Philippine Daily Inquirer on Saturday in which he said: "I have never given any money to any person or group, and certainly not under the name of Abu Sayyaf."

"According to Executive Summary (a publication of Middle East University, Gaza), it is in February 2000, interview with Khalifa, the latter said that they received from me and from my friend P. Malik in exchange for ending violence in Afghanistan," Khalifa reportedly said.

He noted that the Saudi Arabia left Afghanistan in 1988, the year the Abu Sayyaf began later known in the Philippines.

Dead over

"I never knew that the dead was already over in Afghanistan, the conflict in Afghanistan became a civil war that killed the Afghan people each other," he said in the letter.

Khalifa said he was in Saudi Arabia, in the Philippines, in 1996.

"I had to come immediately for my business, I was by then already in US country, to see what was going on in the Philippines," he said.

"I don't know how many times he should be asked 10 years old. That means he was only 14 years old in 1989, about the time he allegedly received money from me. Or even if it was already 1992, he would still have been in his teenage years. Does this make any sense?" he said in his letter to the Inquirer.

Khalifa, who signed the letter as "Jamal Khalifa" and gave an e-mail address—khalifa.jamal@inquirer.com, wrote that he had written President Macapagal-Arroyo in July 2001 offering to help and assist the Philippine government.

Co-conspirator

The United States named Khalifa as "suspected co-conspirator" in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing in New York, and accused him the following year on a visa violation in San Francisco. But he was deported without hearing.

In his letter to the Inquirer, Khalifa said he had a "disagreement" with the Lado and left Afghanistan in 1986, "and we have been apart from each other since then."

Bin Laden, the most wanted terrorist in the world, is believed to be taking command in the Afghan Taliban leader regime.

"With regard to Bin Laden, I have already been proven in 2001 and Jordan court...not just before the media—but I have no relationship with him," Khalifa said in his letter to the Inquirer.

Malik also stated his brother was involved in political activity, and said that apart from family ties, Khalifa had no links in Bin Laden, a Saudi national who was stripped of his citizenship long before the Sept. 11 attacks on the United States.

Chief Insp. Romeo Ricardo, chief of the Philippine National Police (PNP) Intelligence Group, said Khalifa had received his financial education from a group where he left community in the mid-1980s.

Business card

"A check of Khalifa's would have no effect on the financial links to the Abu Sayyaf group, the finding had stopped when (Khalifa) left the country," he said.

RP cops accused Khalifa of financing terrorists

MANILA (AP) — BIN LADEN'S BUSINESS partner of the International Islamic Relief Organization's Manila office in 1998.

The Saudi Arabia-based IIRF was established in 1979 to help victims of calamities all over the world.

The group, which gets funds from the Saudi government and private donors, had provided assistance to Muslim communities in Central Macedonia and the Aegean region in the Balkans.

A 1993 intelligence report of the Philippine National Police also accused Khalifa of financing the struggle by Osama bin Laden's group in southern Philippines.

Khalifa was also linked to a 1993 bomb explosion in a church in Zamboanga, which killed about 100 people.

bin.

The Sunday Saudi Arabian Khalifa bin Khalifa, had applied for a visa but it was to have been set up by IIRF in Manila.

After getting arrested, he said Khalifa was behind the terror act.

At the request of Philippine authorities, Khalifa was arrested in the United States and was jailed for four months in a maximum security unit in San Francisco.

He sought extradition to Jordan, where he was later released of the crime.

In a 1998 interview, Khalifa denied involvement with Bin Laden's terrorist activities. He said they parted ways in 1987 when he discovered Bin Laden was "going wrong."

Khalifa disappeared from the Philippines following the 9/11 attacks.

In the second set of the report, Mr. Arroyo told the country that her administration had to resolve the killing of the victims, and that it was to resolve to find out the truth.

The report also said the

EU 'encouraged'

After meeting with retired Supreme Court Justice Jose Melo the other day, the President issued a six-point directive that included asking the European community, Sweden, Spain and Finland to send investigators to help in the Melo Commission's inquiry into the unexplained killings.

European Union Representative in the Philippines Antonio McDonald and Spain's Francisco Ferraz (both yesterday expressed) appreciation for the steps being taken by Malacañang to resolve the killings.

MacDonald said that he found my Arroyo directive "encouraging," and that the European Union would assist the Philippine government "and say what kind of cooperation the government is interested in."

The EU "has already indicated in the past," he said, "that it is interested in the investigation being carried out. Completion, in the past events being established and those who are guilty being taken to court, and in particular in those killings involving war and," he also told reporters.

"You were that the international community is very keen to help the Philippine government to fully assume its own responsibilities," he added.

Melo said 300 Arroyo came to seek help from the European community was a step in the right direction.

"I think the Filipino people can find in them what steps and examples to overcome those problems," the Philippine Star said.

In separate instances, the European Union had expressed strong view the unexplained killings and urged the Arroyo administration to take concrete steps to stop them.

The US, too

It was after one such call that US Arroyo President George W. Bush's Commission to look into the unexplained killings.

The United States would join the European Union in helping the Arroyo administration expedite the inquiry into the killings.

"The President [Bush] has special expertise. It has offered. He has said his President's Commission that if there are US reports who the details will be helpful, we need really," US Ambassador to the Philippines Christopher Smith said and he became after the end of the year.

Smith and she offered the US government's services a few weeks ago but that Mr. Arroyo had previously told her to let it know how we could be helpful. I haven't heard back yet but I think the European Union is taking that lead," she said.

The ambassador would not say how the US government viewed the number of extrajudicial killings committed under the Arroyo administration, but said: "I think all of us should contribute our experiences can. It's absolutely important for all of us."

Truth

But, however, pointed his Arroyo for taking action on the matter. "I really enjoyed the President's statement today. The best thing we need to do is take it seriously," she said.

In her speech, 300 Arroyo and her administration

now would "work with the United Nations, which the President's Commission government will include the international community and Arroyo's members among any findings and put forth in the commission's recommendations." The same investigation by the Philippine National Police's Task Force was showing that the killings were the handwork of communist rebels as well as "possibly domestic elements."

But she cited "some interesting facts" showing that 23 of the killings were done by the communist New People's Army against its own ranks.

She also cited the "discrepancy" between the number of cases reported by the three organizations of the commission and the number of cases reported by the PNP. "But, even that was reported by three groups as extrajudicial killings based on it to be false when the victims were 'condemned to be alive,'" she said, adding:

"In determining to compromise the one-on-one with the people's rights could be a great in such books. I need to absorb fully what it means."

All Arroyo called on the families of victims, witnesses and military groups to cooperate in the investigation of the Melo Commission.

"We're calling for them to speak out, by the victims and serve the high cause of justice," she said.

Malacañang had requested the proceedings of the commission, claiming it lacked credibility and independence.

Whitewash

Formerly, Hernandez, mother of slain Arroyo de Davao University school paper editor Hernandez Hernandez, expressed doubt that anything substantial would come out of the Arroyo's plan to commission the Melo Commission's inquiry into the unexplained killings, even if it would include the PNP investigation.

"Whitewash jobs had already been done by Arroyo will only be a year, whitewash body and we will never touch it," she said, and she said, "even if it is a group of families of slain victims."

Hernandez said a number of extrajudicial killings victims had already visited the Arroyo and all had found the Arroyo administration accountable for killings in the killings.

She cited the international solidarity mission in August 2003 and the fact-finding mission of international groups of parents, workers and lawyers last year.

"Even Arroyo International has come up with a report on the extrajudicial killings," she said.

In its report, Amnesty International said the series of killings was an endorsement to the Philippines as a country that denies democracy.

It said that to be credible, independent probe teams should also include human rights organizations from civil society.

It added that the inclusion of representative cases of such groups in the military, which had also been accused of rights violations, affected the credibility of the investigative body.

The Melo Commission does not include representatives of human rights groups.

90.9 percent

In her speech, Ms. Arroyo defended her military, which had been accused by militant groups of being behind the extrajudicial killings. She said she believed that "90.9 percent of our military are good, hardworking and patriotic Filipinos."

"They do brave things like taking over cities in battle, putting their lives on the line every day to protect the nation, and make our homeland safe," she said.

Executive Secretary Ricardo Trillana echoed the President's call for witnesses and militant groups to cooperate.

He said the Melo Commission's report was "hardly a comprehensive report" concluding that military groups were not present at the killings.

In fact, Trillana said, the commission merely relied on the testimony of the military, including that of Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Artemio Tapan and retired Maj. Gen. Josefa Tapan in coming up with his list of killings.

"We are saying the families of the victims, those who care to represent the victims' families, [investigate], as the commission will have a better picture of the extrajudicial killings, as the truth will come out," Trillana told reporters.

He said that because of the investigation of the military groups, Malacañang could not help but think that these groups were helping in this way so as to "divert the work of the Commission."

Separate body

But Rep. Rodolfo Garcia of the militant party-list group Bayan Muna said he and his colleagues would cooperate with the truth and inquiry only if an independent body with the power to protect witnesses would be formed by Malacañang.

In an interview, Garcia called on the President to create a fact-finding body separate from the Melo Commission.

He said any new investigation should not be under the umbrella of the commission but "be independent."

"The new body should be truly independent, adhere to international human rights standards, and be composed of members acceptable to the victims' families and human rights activists," he said. With reports from GEC, Galloway, P. and Michael L. (the

Strong Cities for a Strong Republic

A Call for Reason and Respect for Law

The LEAGUE OF CITIES OF THE PHILIPPINES is expressing its vehement objections to the purported move by the Senate to pass the 12 cityhood bills of municipalities which did not meet the requirements provided for in the Local Government Code of 1991 as amended by Republic Act 9009.

Republic Act 9009, which took effect on June 30, 2001, increased the income requirement for the conversion of municipalities to cities. By increasing the income requirement from P20 million to P100 million locally-generated income based on CY 2000 constant prices, the authors of what was then Senate Bill No. 2157 and which is now RA 9009, have set the appropriate fiscal benchmark by which to determine the readiness, viability, and preparedness of a municipality to take on the roles, functions and responsibilities of a city.

The League of Cities of the Philippines would like to profess that we feel neither abhorrence nor rejection over any initiative on the part of a municipality to be converted into a city. However, what we strongly object is the conversion of a municipality that is not yet, by itself, prepared to become a city. Three municipalities (Taguig, Sta. Rosa, and Meycauayan) have been converted into cities after the passage of RA 9009. The League of Cities of the Philippines did not object to these considering that they satisfied the requirements of RA 9009.

Being a city is a serious business, a fact that was established in the Local Government Code of 1991 and further strengthened by the passage of RA 9009. To now turn a blind eye on the noble intentions of the law is tantamount to obliterating its letter and delivering a fatal blow to its spirit.

The passage of these 12 cityhood bills would create a very dangerous precedent. For whatever legal and rational reasons that have been long established through the brilliant minds of our legislators, there is nothing to prevent other municipalities from seeking the same "special treatment" by invoking the constitutional mandate of "equal protection of laws."

If these municipalities cannot even manage to meet the basic income requirement, how can they be expected to perform and deliver as cities? There may even be other municipalities that are better qualified and the bills only discriminate against them. This only leads us to think that the vested interests of a few are the only ingredients needed to derail a sensible and rational Law.

We have been lobbying our position with the Senate for years, asking for neither special treatment nor exemption. What we ask is that the Law be upheld and respected. We would like to believe that our noble Senators feel the same.

The League of Cities of the Philippines together with all of its constituents are closely observing the conduct of Senate deliberations on this matter and pray that the Honorable members of the Senate will individually act on the issue with reason and respect for the law.

PEDFILE ARE USUALLY NONCHALANT about preserving their heritage, but for Dr. Erlinda Gonzales-Bellera, 65, taking care of Legazpi City's relics and book collection is a labor of love.

Bellera's love for culture could have been inherited from her grandfather, Don Mariano Gozon del Prado, a Spanish who was once a captain of Legazpi and later known as the "Grand Old Man of Iloilo City."

Did Manila want the blood history book "Bodoc" in Spanish, now one of the rare books in the National Library?

He was also responsible for the identification of local and home folk songs, and the publication of Legazpi's historical data.

Her husband, the Legazpi City Museum and Library may say, Bellera also wants to be a historian to enlighten people about the value of preserving their country's heritage which, she would say, is the primary key to the development.

Behind

Bellera, a retired teacher since 2000 and was instrumental in its establishment in 1992, said she was motivated by the people's lack of awareness of the significance of the city's heritage and records, and of keeping its history alive rather than erasing it.

DR. ERLINDA Gonzales-Bellera, curator of the Legazpi City Museum and Library, is seen at the National Library.

In the spirit of her grandfather's passion, she has spent a lot of time in Legazpi to build up a collection of local and home folk songs, and the publication of Legazpi's historical data.

She said the historian should be very keen on the "4-C" of popular tourism—care, cost, and culture—and should also focus on keeping what made their place unique in terms of its history and culture.

"Our mission should be to preserve what we have."

ally and what we eat and drink. Instead of bringing down to restaurants offering foreign delicacies, why not let them eat our own products or drink our own wine or our own beer? Our primary mission should be to preserve them but to support the export to them and not vice versa."

But many modernization in the city pose the unique local culture. Instead, they are lost amidst with waves of modern culture, she noted.

Relics raised

Bellera could only lament that some people were misguided by wrong development projects. "The long-term success of being modernized is not in forgetting the history of all historical landmarks in the city, which is still a threat to other existing historical sites," she said.

When the National Park at the center of City Hall, the Capitol and Dr. Gregorio del Pilar in Old Alay City was constructed by the provincial government in 2000, some of the city's landmarks were threatened.

First was the Liberty Bell, a gift given by the American people to Legazpi in April 1, 1945. Located in the area that was the site of the Japanese war to the people of Alay. "Individuality or collectivity is a very important issue as you see, but we have lost it," she said.

Bellera said the Liberty Bell, which was a replica of the American Liberty Bell at the Independence Hall in Philadelphia, was not just the symbol of Alay's liberation from the Japanese but also of the whole Philippines. "It was the starting point of the region's liberation from April 1, 1945."

The bell was replaced with a fake. The real one is now in the possession of the Americans.

Memorials

Another case is the National Monument, an official monument in 1944 in honor of Alay City and the Philippine Revolution. It was built by the Philippine government and was destroyed by the Japanese war and industry, which was transformed into a modern progressive project.

After the war, the government structure of Legazpi and the city were replaced with a new building and the new road were laid out and rubble bridge built.

Bellera said Legazpi was responsible for the opening of public highways and roads in the city and the surrounding areas. The city was built on the ruins of the old city, which was destroyed.

On Apr. 11, 2002, Bellera wrote a letter to the National Historical Institute, asking for recognition, commemoration and intervention in the reconstruction of the city.

"Legazpi's heritage is the National Historical Institute's responsibility. We are the people who are the custodian of our heritage and we are the people who are the custodian of our heritage," she said.

Legazpi's National Monument, which was originally built near the port, was transferred to the New Alay City compound because it was being threatened by the Japanese war and industry, which was transformed into a modern progressive project.

The monument was built by Don Mariano Gozon del Prado, the grandfather of Legazpi City, in memory of the Philippine war and industry, which was transformed into a modern progressive project.

Bellera said that according to some tales, the National Monument was a man who owned a lot of sugar and tobacco in the city. He was killed by the Japanese war and industry, which was transformed into a modern progressive project.

Kapitanuluan Hill

Legazpi is a city that is slowly erasing the development that has taken place in the city. The city is slowly erasing the development that has taken place in the city. The city is slowly erasing the development that has taken place in the city.

The monument, originally located at the center of Alay City, had been an important part of the city's history.

"I have nothing against building new buildings and structures. They can help the city to grow and to develop. But we must not forget the old buildings and structures that are part of our history."

She said the city hall, which is the city's main building, is a very important part of the city's history. It is a very important part of the city's history. It is a very important part of the city's history.

In present, the museum and library was a very important part of the city's history. It is a very important part of the city's history. It is a very important part of the city's history.

She also said the need to create a new museum and library is a very important part of the city's history. It is a very important part of the city's history. It is a very important part of the city's history.

She called on people to give facts and data to support her case. She said she was not a historian, but she was a citizen. She was a citizen of the city. She was a citizen of the city.

Damage control

I was convinced with small and not many people about the collapse of the building. I was told, with all the L.A. fire I heard nothing from him. At the same time, there was a lot of talk about the building. I was only taught how much about damage control.

Good for everything being. I was only taught how much about damage control.

Cool-off season

Some of the best of the season is the best of the season. I was only taught how much about damage control.

Good for everything being. I was only taught how much about damage control.

Feb-07

For the first time, I was only taught how much about damage control.

Good for everything being. I was only taught how much about damage control.
